Boring and irrelevant to most of us.

MTNA Foundation: When Is It Time to Give?

Dear PMTNM Colleagues,

A few weeks ago, I attended a national convention for a different musical group — piano technicians. I have to admit, it was amazing. Classes started at 8:00 a.m., lasted ninety minutes, and five classes a day stretched the schedule until 7:00 p.m. There were multiple classes taught concurrently, offering 102 classes in 19 time slots. It..was..exhausting. And amazing.

One of the classes I attended was an overview of the offerings of the organization. The presenter was young, enthusiastic, and passionate; his 80-minute presentation was brimming with information, and as he moved from one slide to another, his constant enthusiasm began to have an effect on the audience, so soon they were cheering with each new announcement.

Near the end of his talk — when we were all beginning to show signs of becoming overwhelmed — he brought back a question that he had asked at the beginning: What is the value of this organization to you?
